I want you to imagine a late night sitting by a lake or ocean, a quiet calm upon you

Deep Breath, lights off

see the moons path across the water light reflecting, rippling all the way to the horizon

Waves crash softly, you admire

Beauty is a thing, of which you will not tire

It is the dancing of flames, the way this twist and jump how they curve around logs, and warm you up. Fire is only built with the energy of lightning, the oxygen in our air and fuel like dry wood. But man when it catches, what a pyre Beautiful

I think of mother monkeys and how their babies cling on little hands, small mouths, but a little soul alight

The power of motherhood creating energy to keep them running on A defiant elegance of love made strong

No questions in their soul of if they're wrong
Beautiful

There is a wonder in me around these innate attractions Loves of nurturing or mothering, the fantasies of curves and effects of 'biology' Perhaps it is only fractions of who people are, but I can't help noticing the nerves around this intricate simplicity of us. The reactions to an 'acceptance' of this or in the otherway rejections of this 'nature'. How do we all fit in?

The answer may be
There is beauty in all places and situations
You just must learn to see
