

The long game

A sort of misnomer for the strategy of those who play no games
They shoot you straight and do good work
No pursuit of fame or belief in fate

The long game

is to chase the journey, and tame fear to realize that company is the door key for which you aim

The long game

not only is played in the rain but also as the sun makes hair or eyes glint in its golden rays it's to say, 'not today' to scarcity and inflicting pain choosing love and abundance gets you the game

The long game

Dynamic and unspoken runs beneath the radar a subtle yet strong line of communication where our hearts do the adjudication
In this way, you must send any corruption towards whence it came

The long game

You see, is one that must be protected

As things spiral up, parasites latch on those that have borne the weight of selfishness Leave everything they touch lame

The long game

must be pursued relentlessly like a predator to prey boundaries held, gratification delayed, and kindness chosen Your eyes must never leave the ball while still seeing all
If there's one lesson from this, in the long game
Do not be tame.