

Sitting in the shade as the birds chirp on a log, the feeling of greatness in the air there is power here, spirits call me Under my feet is a solid ground
I remember the men who have walked here Rare, today I am here, I am bound, I am mere

There is a buzzing of bees and wind in the trees
The clouds move by and ruins abide Stone after stone artfully placed decorated with love and concentrating power this is the center of the universe
The worlds to it I nurse

So I sit by a cenote, a spiritual setting Significant enough they offered themselves in sacrifice I myself am seeing the power of the place, fitting soft ripples in the bushes, shade, and sounds of the people I sigh as I take it all in

I feel the power seep into me as I reflect for after all our reality is chosen by us alone
The nature, the kindness it refills and refreshes Music plays, the sun rays dance through the leaves yet again I breathe

As I journey through history I think about how those who give this more heed come away different tourists so lost in games of no consequence. As they walk the soil that is real wrought with blood and toil of those who lived back then.

Eventually I sit beneath a world wonder and ponder power, pleasure, purpose before I venture back to the cities of glass and metal.
This has the purity of a flower petal and the strength of the earth.
I am yet again grateful for this adventure since birth