

Children laugh, bikes rev, sirens ring, men talk Cars pass, lights twinkle, women walk, bells ding Darkness comes, hats warm, train horns, Buildings loom Horns honk, tires screech, music plays, Helicopters turn Dogs bark, shoes scrape, people cough, Planes roar
A cacophony of cacophony that has become so normal

The sky looks empty, the glow of lights stealing the stars Steel and stone structures with fluorescent so bright

A world that feels opposite. Nature feels out of place comfort covering us like a weighted blanket yet we keep creating these boxes of bricks.

We live in a world of solutions stacked, solving side effects some other 'fix' made I dream of a world built with nature where we dare design with our kid kids in mind.
Designating many spaces to be places for peace getting rid of these wide roads and making homes that bode well for our world
