

I have no 'home'

I travel where I wish to conquer Light as the wind, but punishing as lightning Ferocity bubbles in my soul because where I stand how I stand, what I stand for is all that is mine
I do not settle for Fine

My voice echoes now towards the mountain tops like thunderclaps. The mountaineers of our time hear my voice as though one of their own breaks through the storm. They remember perhaps they are ahead, but that I work like I have no bed. They know the feeling and worry perhaps I'll leave them one day reeling