

Frankenstein was built from parts of man
They called him a monster

This man built himself from parts of men

Am I not then a monster?

Are we not all built from parts of those which we admire?

He watched a old man teach words and ways of the world to a little girl. From behind a wall he learned himself, Watching, observing wanting that some depth of connection
For awhile he was chained in a dungeon birthed

Genuinity

Companion

Cannot die

Chases creator

I am but parts of men I admire stitched together by a thread of pain and given life through the lightning of nature.

A Frankenstein.

I have sat separated from others pulled by my care for them and the bubbling pain deep inside. Pulled to learn their ways, to ache to join them, but be separated for the way I am.

A Frankenstein.

For awhile since my creation I chained in a dungeon of abuse, manipulation, and darkness. Denied access to light and my curiosity clipped.

A Frankenstein.

There were moments in that darkness however where Genuinity and care came in. Celebration unfamiliar & Love unconditional, I wasn't sure what to do with it.

A Frankenstein.

In many ways I have died and come again unrelenting life pulling me back. I am handed my the memories of my parts that have died and been fertilizer for a new me. By parts unrealized screaming, shrieking to be made whole.

A Frankenstein.

But this Frankenstein's name is James Floyd
